In an article on the COVID vaccine rollout, CNN says that Americans shouldn’t be alarmed if people start dying after taking the vaccine because “deaths may occur that won’t necessarily have anything to do with the vaccine.”

The advisory appeared in an article titled ‘Why vaccinate our most frail? Odd vote out shows the dilemma’ in which Dr. Kelly Moore, associate director of the Immunization Action Coalition, cautions that vaccines don’t work as well on the frail and elderly compared to healthy people.

“When shots begin to go into arms of residents, Moore said Americans need to understand that deaths may occur that won’t necessarily have anything to do with the vaccine,” states the report.

“We would not at all be surprised to see, coincidentally, vaccination happening and then having someone pass away a short time after they receive a vaccine, not because it has anything to do with the vaccination but just because that’s the place where people at the end of their lives reside,” Moore said.

She then said Americans shouldn’t be alarmed to see people dying a day or two after receiving the COVID vaccination.

“One of the things we want to make sure people understand is that they should not be unnecessarily alarmed if there are reports, once we start vaccinating, of someone or multiple people dying within a day or two of their vaccination who are residents of a long-term care facility. That would be something we would expect, as a normal occurrence, because people die frequently in nursing homes.”

While deaths in care homes of people who take the vaccine are described as normal and nothing to do with the vaccine, some would suggest that you could make the exact same argument about deaths of those with multiple comorbidities in care homes that were put down to COVID.

Many have and have been shouted down for doing so.

Poll: Majority Want Travel Bans For The Unvaccinated

A majority of people in Britain are in favour of completely banning air travel for people who refuse to take the COVID vaccine, according to a Sky News/YouGov poll.

The survey found that 54 percent of people believe that those who have not taken the shot should not be allowed to board any airplane.

Just 29 per cent said such restrictions would be unacceptable, with 17 per cent saying they were not sure.

In addition, more than a third (36%) said that the unvaccinated should not be able to use transport in general, including buses and trains.

A further 39% say they support limiting access to restaurants and bars, with 44% saying unvaccinated people should not be allowed to go to cinemas.

Despite the findings, the poll also revealed that almost one-in-five say they are unlikely to get vaccinated. A total of 10% said they are 'very unlikely' to get the shot, with 8% saying it is 'fairly unlikely' they will get it.

That means, however, that 70% are happy to take the jab, despite it's safety being up in the air at this point.

The findings of this poll will only serve to encourage businesses, including the airline industry, as well as governments, to push ahead with moves to require so called 'immunity passports' or proof of vaccination in return for services.

Ontario government says non-vaccinated people could face travel, social restrictions

The Health Minister of Ontario in Canada has stoked controversy by suggesting that people who do not take the coronavirus vaccine will face restrictions on where they can travel and spend time.

When asked by reporters about how the government intends to go about convincing people to get the vaccine, Health Minister Christine Elliott warned that those who refuse it will face difficulties reintegrating into society.

“That’s their choice, this is not going to be a mandatory campaign. It will be voluntary,” Elliot said, but adding that “There may be some restrictions that may be placed on people that don’t have vaccines for travel purposes, to be able to go to theatres and other places.”

When another reporter asked if the government would be introducing ‘immunity passports’, or proof of vaccination cards, Elliot said “Yes, because that’s going to be really important for people to have for travel purposes, perhaps for work purposes, for going to theatres or cinemas or any other places where people will be in closer physical contact.”

Following up on Elliot's comments, The Toronto Sun spoke to her press secretary, who confirmed that the government is exploring several options for vaccine "tracking and surveillance."

"This includes exploring developing tech-based solutions while also providing for alternative options to ensure equitable access to any potential 'immunity passport,'" Alexandra Hilkene said.

Sun reporter Brian Lilley notes "That phrase will set off alarm bells and it should, not just for anti-vaxxers, but for anyone who is concerned about Charter rights and governments running roughshod over them."

Ontario Chief Medical Officer of Health Dr. David Williams has also said that a COVID-19 vaccine may be required for "freedom to move around".

"What we can do is to say sometimes for access, or ease, in getting into certain settings, if you don't have vaccination then you're not allowed into that setting without other protection materials," Williams said.

The comments of these Canadian officials add to the litany of other government and travel industry figures in both the US, Britain and beyond who have suggested that 'COVID passports' are coming, in order for 'life to get back to normal'

In an essay in The Wall Street Journal on Saturday, former Centers for Disease Control and Prevention director Tom Frieden noted that he expects the so called 'immunity passports' will come into widespread use despite any ethical, legal or operational challenges, and despite the fact that it hasn't at all been determined whether the vaccine equates to immunity.
